The UK fundraiser for Sohan For Kids managed to pull in a whopping £200,000 in just the school's first fundraising event. Attended by the crème de la crème of British and Asian societies, the glamorous day saw Bollywood-style entertainment and champagne flowing freely. The money was raised through a live auction, hosted by renowned Sotheby's auctioneer Harry Dalmeny, a silent auction, and a raffle.

Soham For Kids is a charitable school for orphans and severely impoverished children in Hyderabad, India. The school held the fundraiser, on 24th September at patron George Davies' estate in the Cotswolds, to raise money for a larger school building. Their target was £150,000, which they comfortably exceeded.

Soham For Kids was founded in 2010 by Faiza Seth, a leader in the architecture and interior design industry. It aims to build upon the fundamentals of education by considering every aspect of a child's development. "They say that education changes lives, but education is life itself. These children will have a future now, which would have been impossible without the school," said patron Baroness Flather.

The school provides food, clothing and healthcare alongside education. By supporting the neediest children in the community, it prepares them for the world of work after school, believing that education results in permanent, positive change.

With the school's high-profile board of patrons—Dr Amin Jaffer, International Director of Asian Art at Christie's; Suhel Seth, a leading business figure, sitting on boards for Cavendish, RADA, Citibank and Coca-Cola; Ron Ciccone, MD of Turner Broadcasting/CNN in Middle East/Africa for 25 years; Lady Renwick, founder of numerous organisations dedicated to promoting social, political and cultural activities, and a prolific charity fundraiser, are some of the patrons—to help raise the profile of the charity and provide expertise and guidance, the intention is to pull all the stops and give a high quality start in life to underprivileged and disadvantaged children.
